Surging prices and rents mean that families and young workers can no longer find secure, affordable places to live. Home ownership rates have collapsed, while evictions and homelessness have surged.

Up to half a million young adults are stuck at home and many emigrate because of housing costs. The lack of secure, affordable homes is costing jobs, undermining delivery of essential services and damaging students' education at all levels.

We need a housing system reset.

In the past, local authorities and the State played a key role in the building and delivery of the affordable homes people needed. They must resume that role urgently.

A decade of failed policy has allowed extreme elements to paint a false picture of the emergency, spreading hate and division by blaming migrants for the failure of government.

We are paying a high cost for the high price of housing.
